REVOLUTIONARY MOVEMENTS

IN GREAT-BRITAIN.

The secret committee, appointed by the two houses of the British Parliament, to examine the evidences of supposed combinations in Great-Britain hostile to the established government of that country, made their reports on the 19th of February. The following is the one brought in by the commons' committee;

the committee of lords express their conclusion, "that designs destructive to the constitution, have been extended, and are still extending widely, in many parts of Great-Britain."

Report of the Committee of Secrecy.

That it appears to your committee, after a most attentive consideration of the documents submitted to them from various parts of the country, that attempts had recently been made to take advantage of the distresses of the laboring and manufacturing classes of the nation, with a view not only to effect a parliamentary reform on the principle of annual parliaments and universal suffrage, but to cause the total overthrow of all our institutions, and of every description of landed and funded property.

That this system of general agitation chiefly proceeded from the doctrines maintained by a number of societies distinguished by the title of "Spencean," whose tenets were principally drawn from the works of a visionary writer, published above twenty years ago. That at meetings of those societies it was urged, that parliamentary reform must be held out as the ostenable object of their efforts, and with a view to mislead their enemies, but that it was in fact only a half measure; and that the people ought to look to the possession of the land, and nothing short of that; and that as to the constitution, of which so much had been said, this country had no constitution, for it was not to be found in any book, nor could any man tell what it was. In other societies found on the Spencean principles, it had been maintained that the only remedy for the grievances of the people was, to hunt down the land owners, and to deprive those still greater wretches the fond holders of their pretended rights.

It appeared also, that these, and other societies of a similar character, had been guilty of the most blasphemous & impious proceedings; and that as they assumed to be of a convul-sive nature, their political discussions were followed by songs of the most inflammatory and seditious description, and by the recitation of profane parodies of the liturgy, and of various parts of the holy scriptures.

That in order to extend the principles of these societies over the whole kingdom, the most active efforts were made by their various members; and in consequence those principles were disseminated in speeches at public meetings to the discharged soldiers and sailors, and to the distressed laborers & manufacturers of the country; and that, in aid of this object, incredible activity had been used to disperse cheap, and in many instances gratuitous publications, unfolding the doctrines of the societies.

That it had been proved to the entire satisfaction of your committee that a number of the members of these various societies, acting in a body as delegates conceived, and declared, that in their opinion the objects which they had in view might be and ought to be insured by an effort of the physical strength of the people to overpower the constitutional authorities. That they considered the first step which should be taken by them for this purpose was by their individual exertions to discover and foment the discontents of the metropolis and its vicinity; and that reports of their proceedings were made by the individual delegates to the general body.

That it appears to your committee that a plan was formed, by the sudden rising in the dead of night, to surprise the soldiers, and in the terror which would be thereby occasioned, to set fire to the town in various places, and among them by a story of the landing of a foreign force in the country. It was again recommended that the barracks should be the object of particular observation.—Those quarters of the town where distress was most prevalent were have engaged to a certain extent, in the projects of the disaffected, but in whom the principles of moral and religious duty have not been extinguished or perverted by the most profane and miserable sophistry, would withdraw themselves before these projects were pushed to actual insurrection.

But with all these allowances your committee cannot contemplate the activity and arts of the leaders in this conspiracy, and the numbers whom they have already seduced, and may seduce; the oaths by which many of them are bound together; the means suggested and prepared for the forcible attainment of their objects; the nature of the objects themselves, which are not only the overthrow of all the political institutions of the kingdom, but also such a subversion of the rights and principles of property as must necessarily lead to general confusion, plunder, and bloodshed; without submitting to the most serious attention of the house, the dangers which exist, and which the utmost vigilance of government, under the existing laws, has been found inadequate to prevent.

OF NAPOLEON BONAPARTE.

From eleven to twelve we were prepared to receive Napoleon on board—and Lord Keith, as it may be presumed, from the noble delicacy of his situation and feelings, declined receiving the usual compliments attendant on his rank, that they might, according to their settled form, devolve on the ex-emperor, whose sounding titles had passed away with the power that bestowed them. The rank of general is considered as adequate to all his claims on a government who never acknowledged him under any other. A captain's guard of marines was arranged on the poop, to wait his arrival, with orders to present arms and the drum to beat the roll thrice: the usual salute to a general officer in the British service.

The barge of the Tonnant reached the Northumberland in a few minutes after it left the Bellerophon. Our quarter-deck was covered with officers, and there were also some individuals of rank who had come round from motives of curiosity, to view the passing scene. Besides the object of general attraction and attention, the barge contained Lord Keith and Sir George Cockburn, marshal Bertrand, who had shared in all his imperial master's fortunes, and the generals Montholon and Courgon, who had been, and still continued to retain the titles of his aids de camp. As the boat approached, the figure of Napoleon was readily distinguished, from his apparent resemblance to the various prints of him, which are displayed in the windows of the shops. The marines occupied the front of the poop, and the officers kept the quarter-deck. An universal silence prevailed when the barge reached the side, and there was a grave, but anxious aspect in all the spectators which, in the opinion of others as well as myself, was no small addition to the solemnity of the ceremonial. Count Bertrand ascended first, and having bowed, retired a few steps to give place to him whom he still considered as his master, and in whose presence he appeared to feel that all his most respectful homage was still due. The whole ship's company seemed at this moment to be in breathless expectation. Lord Keith was the last that quitted the barge, and I cannot give you a more complete idea of the wrapped attention of all on board to the figure of Napoleon, than that his lordship, high as he is in naval character, admiral also of the channel fleet, to which he belonged, arrayed in full uniform of his rank, and embellished with the decorations of his orders, did not seem to be noticed, nor scarcely even to be seen, among the group which was subject to him.

With a slow step Bonaparte mounted the gangway, and, on feeling himself firm on the quarter-deck, when the guard presented arms and the drum rolled. The officers of the Northumberland, who were uncovered, stood considerably in advance. Those he approached, and saluted with an air of the most affable politeness. He then addressed himself to Sir George Cockburn, and hastily asked for the capitaine de vaisseau, who was immediately introduced; but finding that he did not speak French, he successively spoke to several others, till an officer of artillery replied to him in that language. Lord Lowther, and the honorable Mr. Lytleton were then introduced to him; and in a few minutes he intimated a desire, though more by gesture than by words, to enter the cabin, where he continued about an hour.

His dress was that of a general of French infantry, when it formed a part of his army. The coat was green, faced with white; the rest was white, with white silk stockings, and a handsome shoe with gold oval buckles. He was decorated with a red ribbon and a star, with three medals suspended from the button hole. One of them represented the iron crown and the others different gradations of the Legion of Honor. His face was pale, and his beard of an unshaven appearance. Indeed, his general aspect justified the conjecture that he had not passed the preceding night in sound repose. His forehead is thinly covered with dark hair, as well as the top of his head, which is large; and has a singular flatness: what hair he has behind is bushy, and I could not discern the slightest mixture of white in it. His eyes, which are grey, are in continual motion, and hurry rapidly to the various objects around him. His teeth are regular and good; his neck is short, but his shoulders of the finest proportion.—The rest of his figure, though a little blended with the Dutch fulness, is of a very handsome form.

* I have been given to understand that Bonaparte's conduct on board the Bellerophon had been such as rather to excite the good humor of all on board, so that his departure was not attended with the slightest mark of disapprobation or disrespect, but with that kind of civil silence which accompanies the fatal close of a public execution.

It may be thought, perhaps, that I am very minute in my description of this distinguished person—but I fancied you would expect it of me, and that your well known predominant curiosity on the subject must be gratified by it. Besides, I may be naturally induced, from my studies, my profession, and my habits, to examine the human figure with an anatomical eye; and on particular objects, I have sometimes ventured, for I may safely acknowledge it to you, to indulge a reverie as to the conformation of the human frame, and deduce notions, erroneous enough perhaps, from a comparative view of corporal form and structure, with intellectual capacity and leading dispositions. Indeed I am ready to acknowledge that I actually presumed to play Lavater a little with the late emperor of France and king of Italy—but I shall not trouble you at present with the result of my vagaries.

On returning upon deck, he engaged in conversation with Lord Lowther, Mr. Lytleton, and Sir George Byngem for an hour before dinner. It is understood he complained of the severity with which he was treated, in being consigned to pass his days on the rock of St. Helena, buffeted by the winds, and amidst the waste of waters; and that he could not comprehend the policy or the apprehensions of England, in refusing him an asylum, now that his political career was terminated.—He continued to repeat a succession of questions to the same effect, with some degree of impetuosity; but it would be taking a liberty with Mr. Lytleton, who principally maintained the discourse with him, to repeat that gentleman's replies from the information of others. I shall only observe, that they were accompanied with that courteous address which might be expected of him.

In a conversation which I had with Count Bertrand on the following day, he complained in very forcible terms, of the needless cruelty of their allotment. The emperor, he said, for that title he continued to receive from his attendants, had thrown himself on the mercy of England, from a full and consoling confidence that he should there find a place of refuge.—He asked, what worse fate could have befallen him, had he been taken a prisoner on board an American ship, in which he might have been able to make his escape. He reasoned, for some time, on the probability of success in such an attempt; and they might now, he added, have cause to repent that his imperial master had not risked it. He then proceeded:

"Could not the emperor, think you, have placed himself at the head of the army of the Loire? and can you persuade yourself that it would not have been proud to range itself under his command? And is it not possible—nay, more than probable, that he would have been joined by numerous adherents from the North, the South, and the East? Nor can it be denied that he might have placed himself in such a position, as to have made far better terms for himself than have now been imposed upon him. It was to save the further effusion of blood that he threw himself into your arms; that he trusted to the honor of a nation famed for its generosity and love of justice; nor would it have been a disgrace to England to have acknowledged Napoleon Bonaparte as a citizen. He demanded to be enrolled amongst the humblest of them; and wished for a little more than the heavens as a covering, and the soil of England on which he might tread in safety. Was this too much for such a man to ask? Surely not; nor could such a man imagine, in any moment of depression, if it were possible for such a spirit as his to be so depressed, that the boon would be refused him. It might rather have been a subject of pride to England, that the conqueror of almost all Europe but herself, sought, in his adverse fortune, to pass the remainder of a life, which forms so splendid an epocha in the history of our age, in any retired spot of her domains, which she might have allotted him."

He acknowledged that Napoleon had consulted him as to the probable magnanimity of the English government, on the measure then in contemplation; but in this instance he said, "I refused the opinion he requested of me. It was not from any preconceived opinion to the prejudice of the English nation; no—far from it, that I hesitated for once to obey him. But I could not allow myself to become his counsellor in such a critical moment, and on a matter of so much importance to the comfort of his future life, and the honor of his name. I was not afraid of any personal injury being offered to him: of that I entertained not the shadow of an apprehension; but I thought it not impossible that his liberty might be endangered, as indeed it was, by the resolution of that hour. I was so agitated by my hopes and my fears in alternate succession, that I could only beg of him to accept my loyal and faithful assurance that I would wait upon his fortunes whatever they might be; but it was for him alone to shape the way to them. Nor can I express" he added, "how much I rejoice at my persevering resolution; for had any opinion of mine been necessary, in the slightest degree, to the situation in which I now behold my emperor, I should never again enjoy a peaceful moment." The terms in which he expressed his thoughts, and the tones which animated them, proved the state of his feelings. There was a kind of soldier-like resolution in his manner; but I could perceive that sorrow was in his heart; and firm as I am in my loyalty as an Englishman, and proud as I am and as every man born in our glorious Isle ought to be of that distinguished name, and thought his enthusiasm betrayed him into sentiments and opinions, in which I could not, by any means, acquiesce, I do not hesitate to acknowledge my disposition to admire the emotions of the faithful Frenchman.

Madame Bertrand's complaints were different in their character as well as language from those of the count her husband: her air and manner were sometimes even accompanied with a gleam of distraction. "What can you think," she once said to me, "of my situation? does it not appear to you to be most lamentable; and where are expressions to be found that can suit the description of it to the poignancy of my feelings? What a change for a woman who had held a high rank in the gayest and most splendid court in Europe; where her consequence was such that thousands sought her smiles and were proud to bask in them. The wife of Count Bertrand, grand marshal of the palace of the emperor of France, is now destined, with her three children, to accompany an exiled husband to an insulated rock, where the pride of station, the pomp of life, and the song of pleasure, will be exchanged for a scene of captivity, and such, with all its promised attentions and indulgences, it must appear to us, surrounded as it is, by the barrier of a boundless ocean."

She was curious to know what the people of England thought of her husband; when I told her that as far as I could judge, they entertained an higher opinion of him than of any marshal of France, and that his faithful attachment to Napoleon had a romantic air which was not without its admirers in England. It was, indeed, in consequence of that determined feeling, in opposition to what might be supposed to be his real interest, and the earnest entreaties of his family, that Madame Bertrand had well nigh completed an act of suicide. The agonizing attempt to throw herself from the Bellerophon into the sea took place, it seems, in the evening of the day when Napoleon was informed of his future allotment, and probably, at the moment when the afflicting communication was first made to her.

The little Bertrand's are interesting children: the youngest is between three and four years old; the eldest is a native of Trieste, and was born when his father was governor of the Illyrian provinces; the second is a girl of an animated disposition, that betrays occasional symptoms of violence.—The military character appears to have seized on the infant minds of these sprightly urchins: from morning till night they are employed in fencing, marching, charging on a half canteer, in imitation of cavalry, &c. &c. in which the girl joins with a true Amazonian spirit, under the direction of a little French boy, who, I presume, was born in a camp.

Neither Count or Madame Montholon can speak English; he is a handsome little man, and she a very elegant woman; they have one common comfort, and they seem to think it so, in a charming little boy; you must perceive, that I am by degrees, though rather in an irregular manner, making you acquainted with the whole of our curious party; but you must be sensible that it is the best mode which I can employ.

In a conversation with Count Bertrand, which happened to glance on the subject of the battle of Waterloo, he could not hide his sensations. The little he said was in a plaintive tone, though expressed with candor, and accompanied with expressive shrugs of lamentation. "We fought that day," he said, "for the crown of France; but you gained the battle, and we are undone." I asked him whether he had read Marshal Ney's letter to the Duke of Otranto, in defence of his conduct on the bloody field. That publication it appeared, he had not seen; and when I informed him in what manner the marshal had censured his master's conduct, and that, in the public opinion he was thought to have cleared himself from the imputation of erroneous conduct;—"Well, well," he replied, "I had been in the command of Marshal Ney's division, I might, perhaps, have done worse; but, as I was, I saw much to blame;" but, in comparing Bonaparte with Ney, he cast his eyes upwards to the heavens, and suddenly lowering them to the earth, he exclaimed, with a very significant action, "indeed, indeed, the difference is equally great."

From the information I received in my conversation with our French guests, it appears that the emperor's abdication in favor of his son, is a matter which, as far at least as my knowledge extends, has been altogether misconceived in England; I mean as referring to the immediate and approximate causes of it. If the communications made to me were correct, and I am not willing to imagine that they were invented merely to impose upon me, a grand political scheme was contrived by Fouche to outwit his master, and it proved successful. The name of that crafty politician and ready revolutionist, is never mentioned by the members of our little cabin of Utica, without the accompaniment of execrations, which it is not necessary for you to hear, as it would be ridiculous for me to repeat. Not Talleyrand himself is so loaded with them as the arch betrayer, who has just been mentioned. It was, indeed, a decided opinion of the moment, among our exiles, that Fouche would contrive to hang Talleyrand; or that the latter would provide an equal fate for the former; and that if they both were suspended from the same gibbet, it ought to be preserved as an object of public respect for the service it had done to mankind, by punishing and exposing two so consummate offenders as ever disgraced the social world. The Historiette to which I have alluded, was thus related:

On Napoleon's return to Paris, after his disastrous defeat at Waterloo, and when he may be supposed to have been agitated by doubt and perplexity, as to the conduct he should pursue in that extraordinary crisis, a letter was offered to his attention by the duke of Otranto, as having been received by the latter from Prince Metternich, the Austrian minister. It was dated in the preceding April, and the diplomatic writer stated the decided object of his imperial master, to be the final expulsion of Napoleon the First from the throne of France; and that the French nation should be left to their uninterrupted decision, whether they would have a monarchy under Napoleon the Second, or adopt a republican form of government. Austria professed to have no right, and consequently felt no intention to dictate to the French nation. The final and ratified expulsion of the traitor, (such was the expression) is all the Austrian emperor demands of France.

Napoleon seized the bait, and immediately abdicated in favor of his son; but he had no sooner taken this step, than he discovered the double game Fouche was playing. The letter was a forgery, and it soon appeared that the emperor or Austria had it not in his power, if he had ever indulged the contemplation, to clothe his grandson with a political character.

After he quitted Paris, the ex emperor and his suite pursued an uninterrupted progress to the sea-coast, and it is their opinion that they might have continued in an inactive state, and without any reasonable apprehension of disturbance, for a much longer time than Bonaparte's impatience would allow, in the vicinity of Rochfort.

On his first arrival among us, he occasionally expressed a wish to be informed of the contents of the English newspapers; but as it could not be a pleasant circumstance to him, to be made acquainted with the manner in which his character, conduct, and circumstances were necessarily treated and observed upon by our journals, there was a delicacy maintained in avoiding a communication of their contents. The truth is not to be spoken, or in any way imparted, at all times, is a proverb which was now faithfully adhered to on board the Northumberland. The Count de Las Casas had indeed offered to qualify his general in the course of a month, to read an English newspaper, with the requisite intelligence of the language; an undertaking which it is not very probable he would have been able to accomplish; but he could not induce his master to become his scholar; for the matter was cut short by the following reply: I well know that you think me a very clever fellow; but be that as it may, I cannot do every thing—and among those things which I should find impracticable, is the making myself master of the English language in a few weeks.

Here I shall conclude my first letter; or, as it may prove, the first division of my epistolary narrative; at all events, it will be ready for the first opportunity which occurs for its transmission to you. If it tends to your amusement, or in any degree to the satisfaction of your curiosity, tant mieux; but be that as it may, it will give me the opportunity of saying, how do you do? God bless you! as well as offering my regards and kind remembrances to our common friends.

Adieu, &c. &c. W. W.

RECEIPT FOR DESTROYING CATERPILLARS ON FRUIT TREES.

As soon as the nest of the caterpillar makes its appearance, take a brush (or mop) with a handle sufficiently long to reach the nest on the trees; dip the brush (or mop) into a strong white-wash made of fresh stone lime and rub the place where the nest is sufficiently—this proves at once an effectual cure. My orchard last season was full of caterpillars' nests, until I used the white-wash, which totally destroyed them, and I see no appearance of any caterpillars in my orchard this season.

To the widows and heirs of the officers, seamen and marines of the late U. States brig of war Epervier.

AN ACT

For the relief of the widows and orphans of the officers, seamen and marines who were lost in the United States' brig Epervier.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled, That the widows, if any such there be, and in case there be no widow, the child or children, if there be no child, then the parents or parent, and if there be no parent, then the brothers and sisters of the officers, seamen and marines who were in the service of the United States, and lost in the brig Epervier, shall be entitled to, and receive, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sum equal to six months pay of their respective deceased relatives aforesaid, in addition to the pay due to the said deceased on the 14th day of July, one thousand eight hundred and fifteen, to which day the arrears of pay due the deceased shall be allowed and paid by the accounting officers of the Navy Department.

[Passed 3d of March, 1817.]

The amount of six months extra pay authorized by the above act of Congress, will be paid to the legal claimant's upon application to the Navy Department, Washington, when they shall severally transmit a certificate of marriage duly authenticated in behalf of a widow, a certificate of baptism and of the parish record in behalf of orphan children, a certificate of the relationship of brother or sister duly attested by a magistrate of the county, proving incontrovertibly the kindred and just claim under the said act.—As no intermediate agency is necessary in the case, claimants are requested to send their vouchers and papers direct to the Navy Department, and the money will be paid by checks upon the banks, in the neighborhood of their residence, without expense or deduction. Those who constitute attorneys will have to prove their identity, and affinity, to the officer, seaman or marine, and no letters of administration will be required or admitted in favor of a claim. The payment being specifically applied to the relations aforesaid, none other need to apply, and the strictest scrutiny will be observed when the application is not direct from the person designated in the law.

By order of the Secretary of the Navy.

BENJAMIN HOMANS.

Navy Department, 10th April, 1817.

N. B.—The same proofs and vouchers will be sufficient for the arrears of pay due on the 14th July, 1815, which will be paid by the fourth auditor of the Treasury Department.

*The Printers of the Laws of the United States are requested to publish the above three successive weeks. 18-3t

DEPARTMENT OF WAR,

Additional Accountant's Office,

September 27, 1816.

"It having been made the duty of this office by law, to adjust and settle all accounts in the War Department, which remained unsettled at the conclusion of the late war and are now unsettled—it is hereby made known to the officers of the late army, who have public accounts to settle, and to such non-commissioned officers and privates discharged, who have arrears of pay due them, that by forwarding their papers, to this office by mail, their accounts will be settled, and the balances remitted, without incurring any expense by the appointment of an agent to transact their business for them. The heirs and representatives of deceased officers and soldiers of the late army are also informed, that by forwarding their papers to this office for any arrears of pay due the deceased, the accounts will be adjusted, and the balances be remitted free of expense."

The duties heretofore confided to the Additional Accountant having been assigned to this office, applications relative to the above notification will be addressed accordingly.

LEXINGTON, MONDAY, MAY 12.

The zeal which Mr. CLAY has manifested, in support of the cause of South American freedom, was a faithful representation of the feelings and sentiments of the whole western country on that subject. Few are the individuals on this side the mountains, whose hearts do not beat in unison with the wishes and hopes of the struggling patriots of the south. A striking example of the universality of these feelings in this quarter, was given at the last session of Congress: Every western member, except one, voted against the law to prohibit our citizens from taking supplies or furnishing other aid to the patriots.—Kentucky cannot but feel gratified by the compliment paid to her favorite son, in an official act of the Mexican Congress, not only because it was merited by Mr. Clay, but because it was occasioned by conduct on his part which every republican Kentuckian applauds.

If the election of Mr. Wolcott as chief magistrate of Connecticut, is not a decisive proof of an entire change of politics in that state, it furnishes incontestable evidence, at least, of the decline of Federalism, and of the rapid progress of liberal political and religious principles, in a quarter hitherto enveloped in a thick gloom of error, bigotry, faction and sectarian intolerance. Mr. Wolcott has not, perhaps, alleged all his former Federal sins; he may not be the sterling republican that we could wish him; but he has proved himself to be a patriot, by his zealous support of the late war, by his opposition to the violent anti-American conduct of the Hartford Convention party, and by the persecution which he has in consequence suffered from that party. He is the friend of religious liberty, of free government, of his country, of mankind. He would not, for party purposes, agree to dissolve the union, to paralyze the military energies of the nation, or to prostrate its honor and interests at the feet of the British monarch. There may be slight shades of difference between Mr. Wolcott and the republican party; but he is essentially one of them; and his elevation is a matter of sincere triumph to every republican patriot.

The recent success of the republican candidate for governor in Rhode Island, presents another broad stream of light in the benighted regions of the east, and is a sure presage of approaching universal political harmony among the various members of our happy union. Kentucky will always be among the foremost to receive into her arms the returning prodigals of the north.

WILLIAM T. BARRY, Esq. has been named as a suitable candidate to represent Fayette in the senate of Kentucky. We hope Mr. Barry will consent to serve. In the various honorable stations which he has filled; as a member of the state legislature, Speaker of the House, and Senator in Congress; he has given such cogent evidences of his practical republican principles, of his devotion to the people's rights, that his fellow citizens can look to him with confidence as a faithful representative of their sentiments in the senate.

The Western Citizen, we are happy to perceive, announces JESSE BLED SOE, Esq. as a candidate to represent Bourbon in the state Senate. Mr. Bledsoe is an eminent lawyer in Paris, was formerly Secretary of the Commonwealth, and a member of the Senate of the United States. He has publicly, freely and fully expressed his opinion in favor of a new election of Governor, and the considerations which induced the formation of that opinion. In the correct spirit of a republican statesman, he has "leaned to virtue's side," and asserted the right of the people to choose a Governor, in a case in which the letter of the constitution is at least doubtful or equivocal—the spirit manifestly in favor of a new election.

GEORGE M. BIRD, Esq. in a public speech to the people of Franklin, has declared his opinion too in favor of a new election of Governor and Lieutenant Governor. Mr. Bird, like Mr. Barry and Mr. Bledsoe, is a lawyer and statesman of distinction.

Mr. Sergeant, who was deputed to Europe to purchase specie for the National Bank, has communicated to that institution, intelligence of his having effected the object of his mission. Reif's Gazette states, that he has procured ten millions.

Mr. Jefferson has written a letter to De Witt Clinton, approving the enterprise for opening the Grand Canal in New-York.

THOMAS P. GOSVINO, a leading federal member of Congress, recently died in Maryland.

Latest Intelligence.

Two or three late arrivals at New-York, from Liverpool, have brought intelligence from England up to the 28th of March. That country was in a general state of discontent, and the government evidently much alarmed. Not only was the Habeas Corpus suspended until the first of July, but severe laws against seditious assemblies, against the seduction of the military, and for the protection of the person of the Prince Regent, had been passed. The cabinet had ordered the arrest of many persons, among whom was a Mr. Cushman, who was immediately executed. They had also directed the attorney general to prosecute Cobbett for a libel; and that celebrated writer, fearing an arrest, & perhaps a summary execution, had, with his two sons, succeeded in getting on board the American ship Importer, which is daily expected in New-York. The papers state, that the British ministers had announced a determination to commence prosecutions for all libels, so that the freedom of the English press, so much boasted of by the admirers of that nation, must be completely prostrated, or at least suspended.

The parliamentary debates had become peculiarly animated. The reports of the secret committees, of which we publish that of the commons, and the consequent suspension of Habeas Corpus, gave rise to the most intrepid and manly protests on the part of opposition. Mr. PONSOMBY, a member of the secret committee, admitted that dangers existed, but contended that the laws were sufficient to suppress them without the necessity of destroying the great bulwark of British liberties. Mr. BENNETT denied that the constitution was in danger, and questioned the facts stated in the report of the secret committee. He said, "they complained of seditious libels; but where was the attorney general? Why did he not prosecute the authors? They speak of a conspiracy to surprise the soldiers, to seize the tower, to cut down the bridges. Who were the conspirators? Six men mounted in a chariot, carrying in a stocking their munitions of war! They set forth a manufactory of pikes; and a person has offered to prove that these pretended pikes were intended to form a railing round a garden. They speak of funds which are at the disposal of the traitors, and they find a sum of ten pounds; and it is after allegations, so contemptible, that they propose a bill to suspend not only the trial by jury, but all trial! He would not grant such a power to a ministry who had never soiled their hands with the blood of their fellow citizens; and yet it was asked for those who had already criminally abused the same power!" Lord CASTLERAGHON, nettled at this pointed and severe accusation, rose and declared, not in the most gentlemanly style, that if the member meant to charge him with having dipped his hands in the blood of his countrymen, he asserted a falsehood. The Speaker interposed, and said that if the member imputed an act of criminality to the government in general, it was not an infraction of the rules of the house; but if the charge were meant for an individual member, it was a direct breach of those rules. Mr. BENNETT said he should be the last man to retract what he had an intention to say; but as a man of honor, he did not hesitate to declare that he had intended to speak generally. He had referred to cruelties committed in the court of the palace at Dublin, when the writ of Habeas Corpus was formerly suspended. The Lord Advocate of Scotland mentioned a conspiracy in Glasgow, the members of which had bound themselves by oath, under penalty of death for a breach, to use all their efforts, moral and physical, to obtain for every Englishman, not tainted with crime or madness, over the age of 21, the right to a free and equal representation, and annual parliaments. Many persons had been arrested for this conspiracy. Sir FRANCIS BURNES declared that he saw no conspiracy, but that of ministers to create a false alarm, to calumniate the innocent, and to prevent a reform, the only measure that could save the country. The secret committees had talked of the Spencer societies. Sir FRANCIS said that the present discontents were not imputable to Spencer principles, but to the prodigious system of ministerial despotism, which he apprehended would continue in full force.

The English opposition papers abound in expressions, in every variety of form, of disapprobation of the high handed measures of government. They had formally announced the death of Habeas Corpus, leaving his other half, the Trial by Jury, in a most deplorable situation. In Manchester, on the 10th of March, 20,000 discontented people assembled, to proceed in a body to London, to "undermine the Prince Regent;" 60 or 70,000 arrived in the course of the day. The military had arrested 2,000 of them; a part of these people, however, had set out for London, but were prevented from going far. It has become certain, that the ministry will drench England in the blood of her own people, in order to suppress the rising spirit of dissatisfaction and independence among them; and we apprehend that they will be too successful in doubly rivetting the chains of tyranny on that oppressed and worn down nation.

Great distress prevailed in Ireland for want of provisions; riots had occurred in some places; but ministers had, nevertheless, refused to suspend the distillation of grain.

Despatches from Mr. Adams to our government, and from the British cabinet to Mr. BARRY, were received by the late arrivals at New-York.

A revolution is said to have successfully taken place, on the 5th of March, in Pernambuco, a northern province of Brazil. The people of that province if the news be true, have thrown off the chains of Portuguese monarchy, and declared themselves independent.

BALTIMORE, April 25. It gives us sincere pleasure to be able to state, that D. A. SMITH, Esq. whose credits we learn, has experienced a temporary embarrassment, is now enabled by the liberal aid of the Directors of the Office of Discount and Deposit in this city, to proceed to meet his payments with punctuality—we feel it due to Mr. Smith, as well as to the credit of the Mechanic's Bank, of which he has long been an active officer, to declare, and we do it on the authority of the Directors, that the claims of the Bank on Mr. Smith have been entirely liquidated.

We are assured that Mr. Smith means abundantly to pay his debts, and all who know him are perfectly satisfied of his disposition to do so. It is indeed much to be regretted, that any suspension should have taken place, because it is believed to have been unnecessary.

The Canadians, it appears, are about to form a canal from Kingston to La Chine, by the river Rideau. Another is also in contemplation, to extend from La Chine to Montreal—which will effect a communication between Lake Ontario and the river St. Lawrence.

NEW YORK, April 27, Noon. The Pacific captain BOWEN, as usual, has arrived in a very short passage; and having sailed from Liverpool on the 28th of last month, brings us a load of papers &c. up to that date.

Lord Holland, in the House of Lords, on the 28th ult. moved for the production of several papers, with a view to inquire into the truth of the complaints made in the statement of M. Montholon, relative to the treatment of Bonaparte at St. Helena. The motion was opposed by Earl Bathurst, who contended that he was subjected to no restrictions but such as were essential to his safe custody, and that the privations enumerated in that document were, in some cases, self-imposed, and in others unfounded. The motion was negatived without a division.

It appears from the London papers that some hostile news had been received over land from Algiers, which created a rumor that Lord Exmouth was to be sent out to give the Dey another warning.

The suspension of import duty on rice in England from America, is to continue until April, 1818.

The latest London paper complains of hordes of pirates infesting the Mediterranean.

The Morning Chronicle contains a correspondence between Cobbett and Mr. Lockhart, ending with a challenge from the latter, which was declined by the former.

LONDON, March 18. BONAPARTE.

In the last page of our paper will be found a curious letter copied from the Morning Chronicle of to-day, and purporting to be addressed to Sir Hudson Lowe by order of Bonaparte.

He tells us through count Montholon that "he repaired voluntarily and freely to England, with the view of living there a private individual, under the protection of the British laws."

He describes the convention of the 24 August as the coalition of the four greatest powers for the oppression of a single man.

He then appeals to each of the sovereigns of Austria, Russia, and Prussia; and conceives that if he had been in the power of either, he would have been entitled not only to protection but to gratitude.

For the sake of more clearness, we shall state the heads of the charges (A.) and secondly the refutations, (B.)

(A) 1. The charges are, that he has been exposed to additional restrictions with respect to the space allotted him for exercise.

2. That at those hours most proper for exercise, all ingress or egress from Bonaparte's residence, Longwood, are interdicted.

3. That he was prevented from procuring such books as he may want, or from subscribing to the Journals.

4. That he is not allowed to send a sealed letter to the prince Regent, nor to correspond with nor receive letters from his wife, friends, or relatives.

5. That he is debarred the means of writing an account of his former acts.

6. That the sum for his maintenance has been reduced to 8000*l.* a year, and that the supplies for his table are scanty and inadequate.

Such are the charges. The refutations are as follows:

(B) During the first period of his confinement he had a circumference of no less than 12 miles to ride or walk in without the attendance of any officer—which range had not been reduced till it had been found that he had abused that confidence reposed in him by tampering with the inhabitants. That range was now reduced to eight miles instead of twelve, and within that boundary he might at present walk without the attendance of any Officer. Beyond those limits he might govern any part of the island, attended by an officer of rank not lower than a Captain in the army.

2. Though he has not free passage through the island after sunset the way at any hours, walk in his garden. Sentinels were stationed there after sunset, and he expressed his dislike to walk when he was thus watched. Sir H. Lowe, with every desire to attend to his wishes, after that, fixed the sentinels in places where they would not look on him. Would any one wish these sentinels to be removed altogether just at the time when it was most likely that he should escape?

3. Soon after Bonaparte's arrival at St. Helena, he expressed a wish for some books to complete his library, and a list was made out by General Bonaparte himself, and transmitted to this country—This list was sent to an eminent French bookseller in this town, with orders to supply such of the books as he had, and to obtain the rest from other booksellers. As several of the books were not to be obtained in London, the bookseller was desired to write to Paris for them. He accordingly obtained some of them from Paris, but others of them could not be obtained. These books to the amount of 13 or 1400*l.* worth, were sent with an explanation of the circumstances which prevented the others from having been sent.

The newspapers have been refused, from a knowledge that attempts have been made, through them, to hold correspondence with him.

4. He might have sent any letter to the prince regent but not sealed. The Ministers, who are responsible, must know the nature of such a letter, but it would certainly have reached his royal highness. He may likewise send and receive letters from his wife or relations, but they must be opened; they will then be sent as addressed. Only one of his relations, his brother Joseph, has written to him, and that letter was forthwith forwarded to him.

5. No attempt has been made to prevent him from writing any account of his life.

6. Eight thousand a year has been deemed a fair permanent allowance for his maintenance; but Sir Hudson Lowe thinking the establishment of Bonaparte could not be provided for under 12,000*l.* a year, the latter sum was immediately agreed to.

With respect to provisions and wine it need only be stated, that for nine persons, the number connected with Bonaparte, there are allowed eleven dozen of wine, claret, champagne, &c. weekly.

From the Norfolk Herald, April 28.

HIGHLY IMPORTANT.

Revolution in Brazil.

By a gentleman who arrived here in his Herald, from Barbados, we are informed, that the province of Pernambuco, [in Brazil] had revolted, and declared itself independent of the Brazilian government. Our informant who is a resident of the town of Pernambuco, which place he left on the 13th of March, states, that this revolution was brought about by the concurrence of the military with the citizens, on the 6th of March. It commenced at the barracks, where a colonel of artillery attempted to put some officers of the regiment stationed there, under arrest, one of them ran him through with a sword; and the principal aid of the Governor arriving and endeavouring to harangue the troops he was instantly shot. A general beat to arms ensued, the militia were called out, but they, as also a promiscuously armed population (as various in its character as its color) joined the military, and by 5 o'clock in the evening, this armed multitude was in possession of the town, when patrols and guards were immediately established to prevent individual plunder and violence.

The Governor and the heads of the Provincial Government, had taken refuge in the principal fort, which was given up without opposition early the following morning to the popular party. On the morning of the 9th March, the Governor and his suit embarked for Rio Janeiro, being also permitted to carry his personal property along with him.

On Friday the 7th of March, a provisional government was adopted, consisting of five distinct executive departments, viz. one for the Judiciary, one for Commerce, one for Agriculture, one for Military and one for Ecclesiastical affairs; the chiefs of these departments having the title of "Patriotic Governors." The officers of the old government retain their places under the new order of things, with one or two exceptions of voluntary resignations.

The tidings of the revolution spread from the town to the interior, with the rapidity of lightning, and inspired the most enthusiastic joy among the proprietors and planters, who were daily arriving in town for the purpose of declaring their unalterable adherence to the popular cause. Those who held public situations either civil or military under the former government were among the first to come forward and tender their adhesion to their new rulers.

With the exception of the colonel of artillery and the aid de camp before spoken of, no person of any note was killed; a few lives were lost among the struggling parties unconnected with the main body, caused rather by thoughtlessness and imprudence than from a deliberate wish to commit violence but as soon as the government was formed, every precaution was taken to protect persons and property, and all arms were collected and put into the possession of the government.

On the 13th of March, perfect harmony and tranquility prevailed; but Portuguese property or vessels were not allowed to leave the port. Preparations were making to place the forts and other points of defence in an effective state, and the pay of the military was considerably augmented.

It is believed that as soon as they may deem it expedient to adopt a permanent system of government, they will choose that of the U. States for their model. In the mean time they have forwarded despatches to our government which are understood to contain a minute narrative of their proceedings and views; soliciting an acknowledgment of their independence, and inviting an intercourse with them upon the most liberal and friendly terms. Similar communications have also been forwarded to London, for the consideration of the British government.

Commodore Taylor, with his blockading squadron, was off St. Jago, the 10th ult. and continued very seriously to annoy the Spanish commerce.

Rhode-Island is republican this year. Mr. Knight is elected governor by a respectable majority in opposition to governor Jones.

New-York, April 25.

Late from England.

Arrived at this port, the ships Ann Maria, Waite, and Juno, (both from Liverpool.)

By these arrivals the Editors have received Liverpool papers to the 14th, and London to the 12th ult. The most interesting articles they contain are extracted for this day's paper.

The above vessels brought about 6000 letters. American stocks were at par in England.

Flour and Cotton had advanced a little.

The Prince Regent approved and signed on the 4th of March, the bill suspending the Habeas Corpus Act. Immediately after several persons who had been engaged in the late riots, were arrested, and a Mr. Cushman executed.

At Manchester, Birmingham, and in several of the manufacturing towns of Scotland, as late as the 10th and 11th of March, large bodies of the people had assembled and manifested riotous dispositions.

The weather in England, during the month of February, and the first 12 days in March, had been unusually severe and tempestuous; and we are sorry to learn that several American vessels had been lost on the European coast.

The Liverpool Mercury of the 14th March, states, that there were then in that port 600 sail of vessels, out of which from a moderate estimation, there were upwards of 300 ready for sea.

A letter from a member of Parliament, to his correspondent in Liverpool, states, that it is the intention of government to reduce, without delay, the present high duty on rice imported from foreign countries, to the same rate which is now payable on that article imported from British plantations.—[7*6* per cent.]

LONDON, March 7.—In the debate last night, Mr. WELLESLEY POLE stated, that "the Mint was now receiving gold from the Bank, to be coined, for the purpose of enabling them to resume cash payments. The Bank has also taken measures to recall silver tokens."

There is an innovation in the mode of calling meetings in the counties. We mean the practice of including in the requisitions for county meetings, the mass of the inhabitants. Formerly the Requisition ran thus—"The Nobility, Gentry, Clergy, and Freeholders." None but the Freeholders were summoned. Now the call is extended to the inhabitants in general, of whom the freeholders must be the majority.

The Funds are lower this morning, on account of the number of the late purchasers and speculators realizing the great profits that have accrued.

LONDON, March 12.—About 12 o'clock last night intelligence was received at Lord Sidmouth's office that several hundred persons were collected in Skinner street, determined to rescue Cushman as soon as he should be brought out in the morning. Orders were immediately given in consequence from Lord Sidmouth's office, that the troops should be at their stations this morning as early as five o'clock. It is probable that the peace of the town was very much owing to this arrangement.

LIVERPOOL, March 13.

The Times of Wednesday, says, that last Friday evening an express was received at the home secretary of state's office, the purport of which was of such a nature, as immediately to induce government to despatch one of the police magistrates and a king's messenger to Manchester, for the apprehension of persons suspected of high treason—four persons were taken up, and a search instituted after others.

The fall of stock is ascribed to the disorders and arrests at Manchester.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, March 5.

PETITIONS FOR REFORM.

Sir F. BURDETT, moved that the petitions which lay on the floor, signed by nearly a million of subscribers, should be received. (There appeared to be nearly a waggon load; they almost covered the floor of the house; we understand there were 600.) The Speaker—Bring them up. (A laugh.) It appeared that a great proportion of the petitions were printed. The Speaker informed the hon. Baronet that he must take all such back; one was also discovered to be addressed to the prince regent, which was likewise ordered to be returned. The speaker suggested the propriety of proceeding with the petitions on some future day. Sir Francis acquiesced. A member discovered that one whole column of signatures was in the same hand writing, and that many signatures were detached from the petitions. Sergeant Best insisted that this circumstance was a gross contempt of the house. The debate on the question, whether the petitions should lie on the table, was adjourned.

HOUSE OF LORDS, March 7.

The Earl of Liverpool moved the third reading of the reasonable practices bill; but Lord Holland having pointed out some errors, it was, after a short discussion, postponed till Monday, in order to allow time for correcting them. The army and navy seduction bill was read a third time, passed and sent back to the Commons for their concurrence in an amendment made by their Lordships.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, March 7.

Lord Cochrane intimated, that it was his intention, on an early day, to submit to the house certain resolutions for the purpose of reducing the interest of the funded debt, in the degree that the rents of land and the price of all commodities had been reduced.

Sir F. BURDETT postponed his notice for the resumption of the debate on reform petitions till Wednesday.

It is said that a criminal information has been filed against Cobbett, for a libel in one of his recent publications. Indeed, it appears from Lord Sidmouth's speech, in the house of lords, that the great law officers have directions to prosecute all libellers, where there is a possibility of bringing them to conviction.

We are sorry to say that there were some riotous proceedings at Maryport, on Saturday night, originating in the exportation of provisions. A tumultuous assembly emptied a small vessel loaded with potatoes, which were carried off; and on Tuesday the rioters proceeded to Allonby, and carried off a considerable quantity of flour, and about 11 tons of oatmeal, the road between Allonby and Maryport was much strewn with the meal. Wednesday an alarm was given that they were on their road to Skinbarness, where there was a considerable quantity of grain—Thursday morning a party of the cavalry lying at Maryport, went off to the disturbed places; a number of special constables were also appointed, and every precaution was adopted to protect property.

Projects are suggested in the American papers for the formation of canals to connect Lake Erie with the Hudson river, & Lake Michigan with the Mississippi.

It is a lamentable fact, that nearly 20,000 barrels of American flour have been lost in the late tempestuous weather; being nearly a fifth of the whole importation.

Letters lately received from Trieste state, that a very brisk trade is carried on in that port, in consequence of the exports of fire arms and sabres from thence to South America.

MARRIED.—In this town, on Tuesday evening last, by the Rev. Dr. Blythe, Mr. J. P. H. DEPPER, of Frankfurt, to Miss Rebecca FORTNER, of this place.

WAR DEPARTMENT.

SEC. 1. OF U. S. LAWS.

All persons entitled to Military Bounty Lands for services rendered the United States during the late war, would do well to recollect the notice given from this branch of the War Department, so long since as the 23d of August, 1815, and which has been repeated in the public newspapers many times since that date, viz:

"A land warrant will not be issued to an executor nor to an administrator. The government of the United States has not authorized any person to act as an agent for the purpose of transacting any part of the business relative to the obtaining Military Land Warrants; which will, as usual, be issued gratis at the war department; nor does it recognise any pretended Land Office for such purposes, nor any other agency of that nature, in any state of the American union."

"August 23, 1815." In addition to the above, it may be proper to remind applicants of the classes above referred to, that their letters and documents need not be addressed to any individual at the seat of government, but name, but simply to "The Secretary of War, Washington City D. C." Their communication should contain the address to which the reply ought to be transmitted.

A quarterly communication of the Lexington Royal Arch Chapter, Will be held at their Hall in Lexington, on Monday the 28th inst. at ten o'clock, A. M. Companions are requested to be punctual in their attendance. By order of the M. E. H. P. T. G. PRENTISS, Sec. May 6, 1817. 19 3

Take Notice.

A few days prior to the Favorite February court, I was in Lexington, where I lost my horse, saddle and bridle, and at said court found my horse in the straw pen, where he remained till after sundown. The saddle I have never heard of. I hope any person knowing any thing of it, will make it known to Robert Magnitt, at the Kentucky Gazette Office, or to myself. I have a silver bowl and containing silver rings, quilted in front, and paved stirrups. Made by John Brian, whose name, I think, is under the skirt. I will reward any person for their trouble for the delivery of said saddle. April 17. 19 3 JAMES P. RUCKER.

SCHOOL and ACADEMY.

IT is with much pleasure I inform the inhabitants of this town and vicinity, that by the first of January, I shall have my NEW SEMINARY in a building to be occupied by all my school—the rooms will be large, comfortable and well fitted for the purpose of teaching—the male and female departments separate, an accommodation that heretofore I have not had in my power to render.

Having formed a connection with three gentlemen, whose acquirements entitle them to my highest confidence, I trust it will be in our power to give unlimited satisfaction to all who may favor the institution with their patronage.

In the female Academy will be taught English Grammar, Arithmetic, Geography, History, Composition, Music and Drawing.

Terms of Tuition in the Lancaster School, 4 dollars per quarter, Books, Writing Paper, Slates, &c. furnished. In the other departments, 6 dollars per quarter, [music and drawing separate charges] nothing furnished except pens and ink. Semi-annual examinations will be held, and a regular set of Books kept in the Lancaster School, showing the progress of the children in that department. A vacation of two weeks will be given after each examination.

J. P. ALDRIDGE.
December 18, 1816—53

* The number of teachers, the several improvements in the Lancaster School and the great expense of the establishment will it is presumed, be a sufficient apology for the small alteration in the terms of tuition. A limited number of poor children of respectable parents, will as usual be received and taught gratis.

THE RED RIVER IRON WORKS,

ARE now in full blast; great alterations having been made for the better in the FURNACE, and sheels now making metal of a superior quality. The FORGE is entirely new, and in high operation; making BAR IRON equal, if not greatly superior to Dorsey or any other imported Iron. Any orders left with Mr. Machean, at my Iron Store in Lexington, will be executed with neatness and dispatch, having employed the best workmen the country can afford. The IRON STORE at Lexington will be constantly supplied with IRON and CASTINGS for the convenience of merchants, mechanics and farmers. Patterns left there will meet a speedy conveyance to the works.

IMPORTANT NOTICE TO THE LADIES.

THE Lexington Manufacturing Company are desirous of obtaining a quantity of fine bleached Linen and Cotton RAGS, which are necessary to enable them to manufacture the important article of fine Paper, of which so much is annually imported, and might be avoided if the patriotic and economy of the ladies of Kentucky, would induce them to adopt the customs of the ladies in the eastern states, viz. to place a Rag Bag, which is usually hung up in a place convenient for the purpose, and in which are deposited the Rags that almost daily appear in every large family.—At the end of the year your Rag bags thus attended, will produce you a liberal sum for pin-money, and greatly aid the important manufacturing of your state.

Six Cents in money will be paid for fine bleached Linen or Cotton Rags—and a price in proportion for coarser quality, or for tow made from flax or hemp. Apply at the Lexington Manufactory or to

T. L. EVENDON,

MANUFACTURER of PIANO-FORTES, (many years in London and five years in Philadelphia,) respectfully informs ladies and gentlemen of the Western Country, that he has removed to Lexington, where he manufactures Piano-Fortes; which for goodness, beauty, and price combined, cannot be equalled from any source; on the truth of which assertion, and on that only, T. L. E. presumes to ask that patronage from a discerning public, for which he is solicitous, and hopes when it is found that his Pianos (on the result of long experience) are preferable to others of American make, and no dealer—and equal to the best imported—made of better materials—stand the climate better—and 20 per cent cheaper—that he will meet that encouragement that skill, liberality, and industry may reasonably hope for from a liberal public; which will at all times be gratefully
